PREFACE

Administrative and academic personnel often need basic factual institutional information when preparing grant proposals, developing long-range plans, answering questionnaires, or recruiting new faculty members. Although the information needed by these decision-makers is usually available from various offices on campus, it is often a piecemeal and time-consuming task for the administrator and the data-collecting office to assemble the needed information. This publication is a first step toward the alleviation of these data collection problems.

The basic purpose of this fact book, therefore, is to present useful objective information about the University of Georgia. It is a pilot project which may become an annual publication. It is by no means an exhaustive presentation of statistical information about the University. The editors have attempted to include information which might be relevant to the audience for which the publication is designed, i.e., deans, directors, and department heads.

The information contained herein was obtained from the various campus offices having primary data-collection responsibilities. Because of the number of offices involved, minor inconsistencies may occur since some related information was collected and summarized at different points in time. The editors wish to express their appreciation for the excellent cooperation shown by all offices.

This project is being conducted as a service to academic and administrative personnel on this campus. The editors solicit any criticisms, suggestions, or corrections which will improve the usefulness of this publication.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE

The Cooperative Extension Service is an educational undertaking of the University of Georgia College of Agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture with the cooperation of the counties of the state. Administratively, it is an integral part of the University. It was created by the Smith-Lever Act of Congress in 1914 which provided for the Department of Agriculture to join with the states in conducting off-campus educational programs relating to agriculture, resource development, home economics and youth development.

Staff

Specialists in more than 20 subject matter areas are available to assist county Extension personnel and, through them, the people of the state in planning programs and carrying out recommended practices. The specialist and administrative and supervisory staff numbers about 150. Most of these are housed on the Athens campus.

Responsibilities

Two major responsibilities of the Extension Service are to be a service arm for the University and an educational arm for the USDA. The county agents and county Extension home economists are representatives of both the University and USDA. In their dual roles they carry out broad educational programs in agriculture, home economics and youth development and inform the public of Federal farm programs and other USDA services. There are approximately 450 such agents in the state.

Service Activities

Major areas of service within the broad categories of work include agricultural engineering, agronomy, animal science, community and resource development, dairy science, economics and farm management, entomology, forestry, horticulture, landscape architecture, marketing and utilization, plant pathology, poultry science, veterinary medicine, family life, food preservation, health, home management, housing, equipment and home furnishings, nutrition and youth development, including the 4-H Club program. The subject matter specialists gather the latest research information from the experiment stations, the USDA and elsewhere and make it available to the agents along with recommendations.

Special programs are also carried out with resource development, rural area development and area redevelopment, including the work of the Area Planning and Development Commissions. The Extension Service has educational responsibility in connection with the rural civil defense program and it cooperates in many phases of the Economic Opportunities Act. In 1968-69 the Extension Service published 114 publications and distributed 1,095,700 copies. One of these publications was a 562-page agricultural handbook.

Software

The scientific languages FORTRAN IV and ALGOL, the business language COBOL, and the general purpose language PL/1 are all in use on at least one machine. An assembler language is available for every machine. In addition, a conversational language is in use for remote terminals, and a simplified mathematical language is used on the AMTRAN console.

Services

In the continuing effort to improve services to the University community, the Computer Center has organized a Users Service group. In addition to functioning as the information desk for the Center, Users Services will assume production responsibility for standard programs and provide indirect assistance in the areas of programming and control languages.

Other services are also available through the Computer Center. Statisticians are available to assist in the statistical analysis of experimental data using computers. The applications group performs the necessary programming functions for various groups within the University. The Computer Software Management and Information Center (COSMIC) disseminates programs originally developed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), and the Department of Defense (DoD). The Information Sciences group provides scientific researchers with references to current and past literature in their particular fields of interest.
